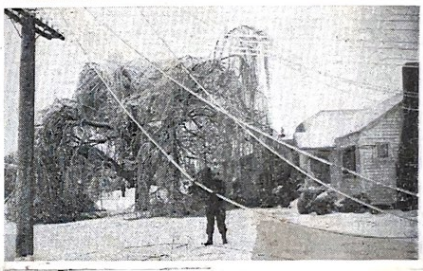
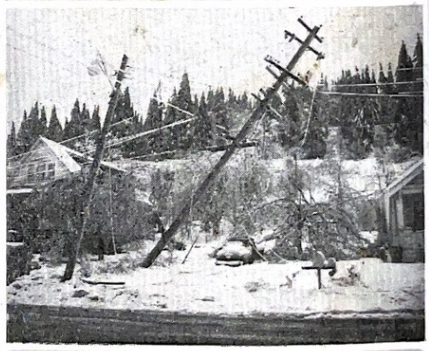
In Blizzard's Wake





Top — A fallen utility pole smashed into the roof of the Clare Wilkinson home at the peak of the thaw last week. The crossarm pierced the roof.

Second — Passersby narrowly escaped serious injury last Thursday afternoon when the marquee of the Commercial hotel in Camas crashed to the sidewalk under the weight of snow and ice.

Third — PUD engineer Bob Willis begins the job of clearing fallen wires from power poles near the intersection of Hall avenue and the highway.

Fourth — Youthful fun and serious damage—both the result of the recent blizzard—contrast in this scene near the Bob Peery home on the East highway.

Fifth — Storm damage appears clearly in these toppled poles and tangled wires along the highway.

Bottom — City crews cleared traffic lanes through Camas streets last week but could do nothing with the snow but pile it in the middle of the streets. This scene along Fifth avenue shows the tons of snow piled up last week.—Vail studio photos by Walters.
